MONTHS OF SERVICE

30 months

Teaching project to be developed by the researcher

The researcher will immediately be incorporated in teaching tasks of subjects related to Veterinary Microbiology and Infectious Diseases of Domestic Animals taught in the Department of Animal Health of the University of León. The subjects within the Veterinary Medicine degree are Microbiology & Immunology (3rd semester), Biostatistics & Epidemiology (3rd semester), Infectious Diseases I (7th semester), Infectious Diseases II (8th semester) and Preventive Medicine, Health Policy & Zoonosis (9th semester). Within the Master's Degree given at the Veterinary School the subjects are Epidemiological Methods and Digestive & Respiratory Infectious Diseases in Swine.

Previous experience of the candidate within the area and the establishment of interdisciplinary relationships between the contents of these subjects by implementing integrated tasks within a teaching-learning model in which connections and relationships between knowledge, skills and competences achieved in different disciplines are strengthened will be particularly valued. In addition, the capacity for teaching in the English language will be positively evaluated.

Research project and knowledge transfer proposal to be developed by the researcher

The research line proposed focuses on the study of infectious intestinal diseases in pigs. Within this field, the research should focus on the study of pathogen-host interactions and the evaluation of control measures for the following three diseases: swine dysentery (Brachyspira hyodysenteriae), post-weaning diarrhoea (Escherichia coli) and swine salmonellosis

(Salmonella spp.). The desired research profile of the Beatriz Galindo candidate should include experience in the study of digestive diseases, their pathogenesis, diagnosis and control.

Therefore, given the research strategy assigned to the candidate, the profile of the researcher in this proposal has the following characteristics:

Field	Knowledge
Etiology of infectious intestinal diseases in swine	Phenotypic and genotypic characterisation of pathogens, particularly those linked to swine
Pathogenicity of disease	Research into virulence factors (including antimicrobial resistance) and mechanisms used by the pathogens to colonise and infect the host. Study of the host response to control and recover from the infection.
Strategies of disease control	Evaluation of alternatives to antibiotherapy: immunotherapy, development and test of new antimicrobials and other compounds with antimicrobial activity (i.e., short chain fatty acids, essential oils and so on), prebiotics and probiotics.
Research on the microbiome and microbiome interaction with pathogen and host	Introduction of high throughput sequencing technologies and other “omics” in the research into infectious diseases in swine with particular interest in metagenomics.

The researcher must develop a plan for the transfer of the main results of the proposed research project.
